Vandusen, entrained last night for Brownsville, and will be rushed to the border by special trains in two sections of thirty-six cars each. He said that the infantry at Texas City would not be sent to the border for the present, but would be held in readiness to leave at an hour's notice.

General Funston, commanding the Department of the South, will take command of the situation at Brownsville, and has been given discretionary powers to act in the event firing by either Mexican force into Brownsville continues. He served formal notice upon the commanders of the two forces that they would be held personally responsible for shots fired into the Texas town, and that the American troops would be prepared to enforce the order if it was not strictly obeyed.
